

Hi Terry,

Many thanks for your reply and helpful information. It's most appreciated!

As per my understanding of Cambridge UP's copyright agreement, I'm able to submit the Accepted Manuscript version of my article to my institutional repository now that the article has been officially accepted by the Journal of American Studies from Cambridge UP. That version is available, and I'm attaching it here for DRUM's consideration. In case it expedites the process, I agree to DRUM's distribution license.

My questions regarding copyright are probably straight forward. The published version of the article will include images that I don't hold the copyright for. I obtained permission to use the images from the holder, but, as per our written agreement, it's permission to reprint in the Journal of American Studies. So, 1. Does that mean I can't include the article with images in DRUM if accepted; and 2. Is it still possible to submit the Accepted Manuscript to DRUM without the images?

Thank you again for taking the time to work on this with me, and I look forward to discussing it further.

Best,
Tim Bruno

Hi Tim,

Only faculty are authorized to submit directly in DRUM. It's possible that we might be able to include your article in DRUM but we would have to deposit the article on your behalf. Please send us a PDF of the article once it is available and we can evaluate it for inclusion in DURM. In addition, you will need to state your agreement via email to the license available at http://drum.lib.umd.edu/help/license_text.jsp.

Regarding copyright, you can send any questions to me and, if I'm not able to assist you, I will forward your message to the appropriate person.

Best regards,

Terry

Subject: Graduate Instructors Submitting to DRUM

Good morning,

My name is Tim Bruno, and I'm a doctoral student and instructor with the University's English Department. I'm writing because I'm in the process of submitting a final proof of an article to an academic journal that allows its authors to archive post-print versions; since that's the case, a colleague recommended looking into submitting the article to UMD's repository.

My basic question is, can I archive this article with DRUM even though I'm a graduate instructor? And if so, is there anyone available to assist me with the process, particularly since I have questions regarding copyrighted material for which I have publication permission?

Thank you for any help you might provide.

Regards,
Tim Bruno
