COUNTRY-BY-COUNTRY RESULTS:

AMERICAS:

MEXICO
Reforma

Mexicans widely endorse existing norms against using torture, even in cases of terrorism. Support for rules against torture has increased the most dramatically in Mexico among publics polled in both 2006 and 2008.

- Nearly three-quarters (73%) reject the use of torture in all cases, while 24 percent favor an exception for terrorists when innocent lives are at risk. Only 7 percent fell that torture should generally be allowed.
- Mexican support for unequivocal rules against torture has grown from 50% in 2006 to 73%, while the number supporting an exception in case of terrorism remains steady at 24%.

UNITED STATES
Program on International Policy Attitudes / Knowledge Networks

While Americans oppose the use of torture on the whole, the majority endorsing an unequivocal rule against torture is more modest than in other countries and has declined since 2006.

- A modest majority (53%) feels that torture should unequivocally not be allowed, while forty-four percent favor an exception for terrorists. Thirteen say torture should be allowed in general.
- Support for making exceptions for torture in the case of terrorists has grown among Americans since 2006 (44%, up from 36%), while the majority opposing the use of torture in all cases has fallen slightly (53%, down from 58%).

EUROPE:

FRANCE
Efficience 3
France has one of three publics (along with Britain and Spain) with the largest majorities in favor of unequivocal rules against torture and one of the smallest minorities that favor allowing the use of torture in general.

- 82% oppose the use of torture under any circumstances, while just 16% favor an exception to protect innocent lives. A mere 4% say governments should be allowed to use torture in general.
- Support for firm rules against torture has risen in France since 2006 (82%, up from 75%), while those in favor of allowing torture in cases of terrorism has remained largely stable (16%, down from 19%).

GREAT BRITAIN
Chatham House (Royal Institute of International Affairs) / GlobeScan

Like their European neighbors in France and Spain, Britons are among those with the largest majority opposing the use of any torture, even when presented an argument introducing the threat of terrorism. Support for rules against torture has also increased significantly in Britain.

- More than four in five (82%) in Britain support unequivocal rules against torture, and very few favor an exception for terrorists (16%). Just 4%—among the lowest polled—favor allowing torture in general.
- The majority opposing torture under any circumstances has risen 10 points in Britain since 2006 (82%, up from 72%), while those saying “terrorists pose such an extreme threat” that exception should be made have fallen from 24% to 16%.

RUSSIA
Levada Center

More Russians favor unequivocal rules against the use of torture than say exceptions should be made for terrorism. However only a plurality takes this position and support is less widespread than in other publics.

- Approximately half (49%) oppose the use of torture under any circumstances, while 36% make an exception in the case of terrorists. Seven percent favor governments being allowed to use torture as a general rule.
- Russian opposition to all torture has risen somewhat since 2006 (49%, up from 43%), while those saying its use should be allowed in cases of terrorism has remained steady (36%, from 37% in 2006).

SPAIN
Elcano Royal Institute
Spain is has the largest majority endorsing norms against the use of torture (along with Britain and France) and has had one of the largest increases in majority support for unequivocal rules against torture among publics asked in recent years.
