August 15th!

That’s the first day for young (30 and under) undocumented residents who arrived in the USA before the age of 16 and have lived in the USA continuously since 15 June 2007 to apply for a temporary work permit (which is renewable) in the deferred removal program announced by the Obama administration. There are several other limitations including school attendance. Check carefully!!

Here are two barriers: (1) The applicants will have to provide a set of documents supporting their claim of eligibility. (2) The application will cost $465 (a few applicants will get fee exemptions).

And there’s a scary element of the process: no appeal! So a staff person who for some reason doesn’t like the applicant, that’s it! So be as careful as possible with the application.

Higher Education for the Undocumented

California is now home to the first online university program designed specifically for undocumented immigrants. It’s the National Dream University, a joint project of the UCLA Center for Labor Research and Education and the National Labor College.* NDU is a year-long 18 credit and nationally-accredited certificate program for students interested in learning about immigration and labor rights. The goal is to make higher education more accessible to undocumented immigrants (and others) wherever they are—and without cutting into other aspects of their home and/or work life.

The program is far from free; the cost is $2,490 for the year-long 18-credit program. (Five of the six certificate courses are $315 each.) Of course, that’s a lot less than the cost of most institutions of higher education. Applicants do not have to be undocumented, but they must have demonstrated a commitment to the immigrant or labor rights movements. The start date is in January 2013.

To apply to National Dream University, you need to take three steps: (1) Submit your completed application form: http://goo.gl/pAeW2. (2) Send your personal statement and electronic copy(ies) of your letter(s) of recommendation to nationaldreamuniversity@gmail.com. This is to show that the applicant has completed secondary school with at least a 2.7 grade average. (3) Mail in your official (sealed) transcripts to: 675 S., Park View St. Los Angeles, CA 90057 ATTN: National Dream University. Trouble completing the application? We’re sure that CASA, MMYC, ALP or other local organizations will help.

Shoot ‘Em

"Today, we call an act like the mass shooting in Aurora, Colorado, or the even more recent one in Oak Creek, Wisconsin, ‘senseless.’ Yet, we should face these events as what they really are, a much bigger national tradition” seemingly embedded in our “national culture.” (The quotation is by Professor Michael Vlahos of the Naval War College.)

We watch extreme violence in the cinema and its lesson is applied outside the cinema. And we don’t limit gun possession because we are afraid of the political power of the NRA and/or we have learned well the lessons of the cinema plus wartime violence: a gun can get you what you want. The Second Amendment? It protects possession by those in militias. Who are in militias these days?

Help to squash these untruths

"Immigrants come to the USA to get welfare.” Not so!*
"Immigrants are a drain on the USA’s economy.” Not so!*
"Immigrants take jobs away from USA citizens.” A very few jobs!*
*Each of these has been shown to be untrue based on high-quality research.

Maryland Tax Free week is August 12 - 18

Purchases of qualifying clothes and shoes for $100 or less are exempt from the state’s 6% sales tax.
WHAT'S UP?

EDUCATION: WHO WILL MAKE DECISIONS?

When the County Executive set up an education advisory group, it seemed to set up rivalry or conflict between his executive office and the Board of Education. Some wondered if the two-headed leadership encouraged Bill Hite to leave for Philadelphia. Now we read in the Gazette-Star (2 August 2012): Education policy adviser Christian Rhodes “said that there is a leadership gap in the school system as Hite’s deputy, Bonita Coleman-Potter, left for a job leading a Mississippi school district and Baker is looking to fill that gap. ‘He’s going to take a very active and aggressive role in education in the county’... But some worry that Baker’s increased interest and participation in the superintendent search and education in general could be stepping on the toes of the elected school board.” Board chairwoman Verjeana M. Jacobs: “The leadership role in the process will be [taken by] the board of education. ... The county executive will have the part of stakeholder.” Let’s hope the schools don’t suffer due to a rivalry. The need is to be full speed ahead.

EDUCATION: SUSPENSIONS

In BLP issue 247, the issue of suspensions was raised, and the point was made that social class rather than race may be the most potent factor. The state’s education officials should explore this possibility and develop policies accordingly. Indeed, there are many factors that might contribute to disruptive behavior, e.g., the peer group, the neighborhood, and the family structure. We must have better research to have better policy.

A new note: Nearly one in six African-American students was suspended from school during the 2009-10 academic year (the latest year for which national data are available). Whatever the cause, public policy must lead to positive changes—within the school and beyond. We cannot “lose” such a large segment of the youth population.

THE NATION: THE CRAZIES STILL AT IT!

A so-called “birther” organization known as the Conservative Majority Fund is currently running a national ad campaign claiming that it can disqualify President Obama from running for reelection. If that doesn’t work, perhaps they will run a campaign claiming that Barack and Michelle Obama were brother and sister born of a male werewolf who lives on a polar ice cap except when he visits Hawaii to drop off his latest children.

FARMERS’ MARKETS: CROSSROADS PLUS

We have a good farmers’ market in the Langley Park area, the Wednesday afternoon Crossroads Farmers’ Market. But it sure isn’t the only one. There’s a weekly market on the University of Maryland campus, an almost daily one just inside the Beltway on New Hampshire Avenue, and now we read: “As demand for locally grown fruits and vegetables has increased, so too has the number of urban farmers markets sprouting up across the nation. USDA Deputy Secretary Kathleen Merrigan recently announced a 9.6% increase over 2011 listings in the National Farmers Market Directory, which tracks farmers markets throughout the United States.”(Smart Growth Online)

PG Co: BEST USE OF RESOURCES?

“Female officers posing as prostitutes engage the would-be johns over the phone after placing fake ads on websites devoted to solicitation. ... In five College Park area hotels, officers arrested 13 men for assignation (the act of meeting up in order to exchange sex for money) and six women on prostitution charges. Both are misdemeanor offenses in the state of Maryland. [Later] 11 more men were arrested for assignation and six women for prostitution. All involved are adults.” (Source: PG Police web site.) Is this the best use of the county’s police resources? What if all of the anti-sex resources were, instead, directed at high-crime neighborhoods?

Is the police action close to entrapment? Wikipedia helps to figure this out: “In law enforcement, a sting operation is a deceptive operation designed to catch a person committing a crime. A typical sting will have a law-enforcement officer or cooperative member of the public play a role as criminal partner or potential victim and go along with a suspect’s actions to gather evidence of the suspect’s wrongdoing.

“Sting operations are common in the United States, but not allowed in other countries such as Sweden and the Netherlands. ... Two examples of sting operations: An undercover officer posing as a potential customer to raid illegal prostitution. An undercover officer posing as a prostitute to raid illegal solicitation.” So it is “legal” entrapment in the USA. Should this law be reconsidered?

ROUTE 1 TO MT. PLEASANT: BUS DESIGN

Yes, there is to be a new route starting at Ikea and ending at 34th Street in Mount Pleasant. (That’s a nice gift to Ikea. Hum.) The web site states: “This section of Route 1 is experiencing a renaissance: new apartments and shopping venues in North College Park, residential high-rises and restaurants closer to downtown and the University, a cluster of retail, restaurants, and cultural venues in Hyattsville, and art galleries and schools, artist housing, museums and movement studios in North Brentwood, Brentwood, and Mount Rainier.” And there’s a competition to design the future busses! To see the three finalists, go to http://www.route1ride.org/bus-wrap-competition/.

PG Co: THE JUSTICE SYSTEM

A blogger (obsrvr@comcast.net) writes: “College Park gunmen: one released already, one gets bail/bond set at $6,000?! Both have prior charges for armed violence. Unbelievable. This morning’s shooting is the second in 30 days in the Lakeland neighborhood, vicinity of the Route 1 McDonald’s in College Park backing up to Lake Artemesia. News accounts have described gunmen as firing at a crowd in the parking lot, but no one was hit. Thank God. In custody are Melvyn Douglass Watson, Jr., 18, of Greenbelt, and Dikimbe Rasheed David-Brandon, 20, of Bladensburg. 18 y.o. Watson had prior armed car-jacking charges in 2009 (when he was 15!). Outcome is unclear from court records online. David-Brandon had an armed robbery charge in 2010, which was dismissed for reasons unknown. Both have prior charges for armed violence and yet, astonishingly, according to online court records...”
SINGLE MEMBER DISTRICTS

As readers know, the state district realignment has created a single-member district, carving 47b out of what used to be 47 - thus creating 47a for two delegates. (There are three incumbents in district 47, so the race for 47b might be an interesting and possibly painful race.) The purpose of the single district is to make more likely the election to the State Assembly a Latino or Latina because the area covered by the new district has a large Latino/a population. Is a race/ethnic district a good thing?

Here is a portion of an article in the Gazette (13 July 2012) by Daniel Leadeerman.*

"Creating such subdistricts can give political strength to communities that share common interests, such as minority populations, said Kim Propeack, political director for the immigrant activist organization Casa of Maryland, which supported the creation of [two] Hispanic districts. Subdistricts have been applied all around the state and have helped elect black delegates in districts such as 23B and 37A, she said.

"The new 47B might give residents a stronger voice in development issues — particularly related to the planned Purple Line light-rail system that will pass through Langley Park—by ensuring their representative lives in the area, Propeack said.

"But some say creating more single-member districts can potentially diminish voter representation in the long run by making a single legislator difficult to unseat. Nationwide, between 30% and 40% of single-member seats are uncontested in general elections, said Rob Richie, director of the Takoma Park-based nonprofit FairVote.org. 'Having no choice at all is pretty depressing,' Richie said." Research supports the view that such districts deter legislative compromise.

So it is likely that starting next year there will be a state delegate for the Langley Park area who is a Latino or Latina. Let's hope that the elected person works hard to preserve and enrich the Langley Park area. The pressures of gentrification must be balanced by efforts to stabilize and preserve the vital immigrant neighborhood called Langley Park.

THE WAR ON DRUGS
A RECONSTRUCTED HISTORY

A “There are too damn many Black and Hispanic kids roaming the streets and causing trouble.”
B “Yah, yah; we gotta find a way to keep them away.”
A “Let’s have something called ‘a war on drugs’ so we can arrest a lot of them and keep ‘em in jail a long long time.”
B “But over a decade the war might cost a trillion dollars.”
A “It’s worth it to keep those damn kids in jail rather than on my street. Just look at ‘em and you know they are dangerous.”
B “What about the people who will be killed in the countries where the drug plants are grown or the drugs are shipped through?”
A “The hell with those culturally inferior people. We’ve gotta launch that war. And then we White folks will be safe.”
B: “What about decriminalization with health care?”
A “You crazy? Taking drugs is an evil crime deserving jail time.”
B “Okay, the war on drugs it will be.”
Note: The A and B letters are used to protect privacy.

"In June 2011, the Global Commission on Drug Policy released a critical report on the War on Drugs, declaring The global war on drugs has failed, with devastating consequences for individuals and societies around the world. Fifty years after the initiation of the UN Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, and years after President Nixon launched the US government’s war on drugs, fundamental reforms in national and global drug control policies are urgently needed.'"

Income in MD: Immigrants and Natives

Our “dear friends” at the Center for Immigration Studies compiled the data in the above graphic based upon Census information from 2010 and 2011. It perhaps was collected to demonstrate that immigrants weren’t keeping up with natives in the various states, including Maryland. But in Maryland, it seems that for average and median household income the gap is surprisingly small. But there clearly is a burden because per capita median household income displays a significant gap. That’s because Maryland’s immigrant households are significantly larger: 3.2 people compared with 2.4 people. Immigrant families stay together longer, and fertility rates are higher. Another striking difference is home ownership: For immigrant households, ownership is 59%; for natives, it’s 69%.
records, David-Brandon has been released same-day on his own recognizance today! Zero bond. Note that bail for him last time in Maryland was $150,000. For Watson, bailbond seems to have been set at a mere $6,000 although he remains in custody as of this writing. With the level set so shockingly low, we can pretty much expect both to be free soon. The only question is this: will someone kill them before they kill someone else? Really, who is making these decisions?!’ [No reply to our quest for explanation.]

PROTECTING WOMEN FROM ABUSE

From the Huffington Post (16 May 2012): “House Republicans on Wednesday passed their bill to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act, despite protests from the White House, most Democrats and even some Republicans for not doing enough to protect LGBT, Native American and undocumented immigrant women.” The bill passed 221-205 on a largely partisan vote.

The House bill discourages undocumented immigrant women from reporting abuse without the threat of being deported, cut protections for immigrant victims of violence whose legal status is controlled by an abusive spouse, and it put many perpetrators out of reach of law enforcement by making it harder for undocumented victims to report and assist in the prosecution of violent crimes. The House bill also makes it harder for Native American women to seek justice against their abusers, and it leaves out protections for the LGBT community altogether. Racism, sexism, and more!

A coalition of national Latino organizations has been calling for members of the House of Representatives to pass a VAWA that protects vulnerable immigrant women. Is there a way to arrange for the abusive spouses to turn their abuse toward members of the House who voted for the limited bill?

Note: When searching via Google for an image for this item, the results tell us much about the attitude of too many people towards Latinas. A majority of the searched images portrayed Latinas (presumably) providing oral sex, sometimes with brutality. How very sad; how likely to encourage some people to force this act upon women.

HOPE FOR PG COUNTY’S MOBILE FOOD VENDORS?

On 7 August 2012, the Liberty Justice Center filed a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of a City of Evanston ordinance that exists only to protect established restaurant owners from the legitimate competition that food trucks would bring to the City. James Nuccio and Gabriel Wiesen created their food truck, Beavers Donuts, in early 2012. In less than a year, they built an enthusiastic following; wherever they go in Chicago and the surrounding area, people line up to get the coffee and donuts they make fresh in their colorful vehicle. But despite their success elsewhere, James and Gabriel are not allowed to operate in Evanston. That’s because Evanston’s City Code only allows owners or agents of existing brick-and-mortar restaurants to operate food trucks there. That restriction doesn’t serve any legitimate health or safety purpose—Beavers Donuts fulfills every other licensing requirement—but serves only to protect one group of established business owners from creative competition. This Evanston rule appears to violate guarantees of equal protection and due process. What will the legal action yield in Evanston? Is the legal action relevant here? VACANT RETAIL: HOW ABOUT TEMPORARY USES?

Driving along University Boulevard, one certainly sees a few “for lease” signs. Even the old Shoppers is still boarded up. Not too pretty! But what to do? An article from Greater Greater Washington last November offers a good suggestion: a temporary use. Here are the article’s first two paragraphs:

“Imagine you have a long-vacant storefront or empty lot in your neighborhood. What if, just for a few months, it could become a plant nursery, a food garden, a beer garden, a sculpture garden, a playground, a clothing boutique or a tiny movie theater?

“These small, temporary projects have the ability to revitalize vacant spaces, enliven neighborhoods, and provide small entrepreneurs a way test out their ideas with relatively small capital investments. This is what’s called ‘temporary urbanism’ and shows how we can put vacant space back into productive use, even if only temporarily.”

PROTECTING YOUNG PEOPLE FROM DEATH

Oh those terrible people who try to sneak across the border from Mexico into the USA. How dare they? And of course they dare for their economic and/or physical wellbeing. They don’t leave home for fun, and neither did the residents of small towns and farms in the USA leave for cities just for fun. An article in The National Journal (7 August 2012) provides a vivid example. Here are the first 100 words:

“Several months ago at a Texas shelter near the U.S.-Mexico border, Jessica Jones met a 16-year-old boy from El Salvador who had lost his entire family to violence in his Central American hometown. He had left El Salvador in an attempt to avoid the same fate. The teen started the nearly 2,000-miles journey through Mexico in the hopes of reaching the U.S., but he was nabbed by immigration officials before he could make it into Texas. ‘His whole family [was] killed by gangs,’ said Jones, a fellow at the Women’s Refugee Commission, a nonprofit organization that advocates for laws, policies, and programs for refugees and other displaced people.”

Should the boy be allowed into the USA as an asylee? He might well qualify, but of course he needs a good lawyer and a receptive government decisionmaker.

Volunteer! CASA de Maryland is seeking committed, progressive professionals to assist us in preparing youth across Maryland to apply for relief from deportation as a result of the Obama Administration's June 15 announcement regarding Deferred Action. This announcement combined with the upcoming critical battle to defend the Maryland Dream Act in the November elections represent a significant turning point in the immigrants' rights movement. CASA and all of us need your help to keep the momentum going! Volunteers will be expected to interact with prospective applicants and help them navigate through multiple stages of the application process. During the clinics, volunteers will be placed at various work stations where applicants will be screened for Deferred Action eligibility criteria as well as provided assistance in assembling application packages. As such, CASA is looking for: motivated progressive professionals who are bilingual (Spanish/English), commitment to provide assistance during multiple clinics, available weekday evenings and/or Saturdays, and who are outgoing, multitasking individual comfortable working with the low-income immigrant community. All volunteers will be required to attend a volunteer orientation/training prior to the clinic dates. Application assistance clinics will be held weekly during weekday evenings and Saturdays at CASA's Multicultural Center located in Langley Park as well as at our Baltimore Welcome Center starting August 15, 2012. If this sounds like something you want to be a part of please follow this link to the volunteer sign-up form: www.casademaryland.org/deferredaction.

IIMMIGRANTS IN RISKY OCCUPATIONS

Pia M. Orrenius and Madeline Zavodny, in a paper to appear in the International Handbook on the Economics of Migration, conclude: (1) immigrants in the USA and elsewhere are overrepresented in occupations and industries with higher injury and fatality rates; (2) immigrants have higher work-related injury and fatality rates in some advanced economies, but not all; and (3) most immigrants appear to earn risk premiums similar to natives for working in risky jobs.

Immigrant Latinos worked in occupations with higher fatality and injury rates than native-born Latinos as well as male non-Hispanic Euros and Blacks. What’s going on? Workers with relatively low levels of human capital are more likely to work in manual labor jobs that involve more risk. Less-educated workers typically have fewer job choices, lower incomes and less wealth. So if you see a Latino crew on a roof or similar dangerous work, the general finding is confirmed. And we might sympathize.

LETTING THE COUNTY KNOW

Prince George’s County government is offering a new and faster way to submit service requests for non-emergency issues like
- Reporting potholes
- Cutting shrubbery
- Fixing streetlight poles
- Reporting blighted property
- Reporting property standards violations
- Needing social service assistance
- And so much more

Here is the best part: you can submit your request online or download the CountyClick application onto your mobile device. The latter will allow you to file a report from your smartphone. Click here to learn more about CountyClick. (Thanks to Senator Victor Ramirez for this item.)

FAT AND HEALTH

Today, 12.3 million children and adolescents are obese. Since 1980, the obesity prevalence rate has more than doubled among children ages 2 to 5 years, almost tripled among children ages 6 to 11 years, and more than tripled among adolescents ages 12 to 19. Obesity disproportionately affects disadvantaged populations, black children, and Mexican-American children. If the epidemic of obesity among children and adolescents is not halted and reversed, today’s generation of young Americans may be the first generation who will live sicker and die younger than the generations before them. Prevention is critical, for those who become overweight or obese during childhood or adolescence have a greatly increased risk of being obese as adults. (From a report by the National Collaborative on Child Obesity Research, 2011.)

NOTES ON TRANSIT

From a coalition of transit supporters, including supporters of the Purple Line, to state legislators: ‘You surely know that funding for transportation projects at the State level has been flat since 1992. In the meantime, the revenue stream has shrunk, automobile traffic has dramatically increased through the two decades since, to the point where the Washington, DC area is the most congested in the country—a distinction we believe you should view with alarm, and a will for action. There are many transportation projects which are badly needed; some of them are in advanced planning. These projects will bring construction jobs, planned development along their routes and tax revenue on their completion. Without funding, these projects will not happen. We strongly urge you to put and keep critical transportation funding on the agenda until appropriate funding is secure, and not be distracted by other, far less important issues.’

And a few paragraphs from Ryan Holeywell’s August 2012 article in Governing, “Bus Rapid Transit Gaining Traction Despite Concerns.” Its relevance is the Purple Line, the question being: If the billion-plus dollars are not available for light rail, should suburban Maryland build a BRT Purple Line for a billion-minus dollars?

‘BRT is a path that transit agencies are likely to continue to pursue as they try to stretch dollars. Nearly 85% of transit agencies had flat or decreased capital funding in the wake of the recession, according to a survey released by the American Public Transportation Association last year. Transit agencies save money with BRT because of lower infrastructure costs—they don’t have to lay down track or dig underground—and there are lower personnel costs, since they can use the same types of drivers and mechanics that they use for existing buses. Cleveland, for example, opened its 7-mile BRT in 2008 at a cost of $200 million. Light rail would have cost nearly $1 billion, says Joseph Calabrese, general manager of the Greater Cleveland Regional Transit Authority. ‘A few people said it should be light rail or nothing,’ he says. ‘In that case, it would have been nothing.’

‘In New York City, officials developed a system that has embraced some BRT tenets, like off-board fare collection, signal priority for buses at some intersections and greater distances between stops. But it doesn’t have bus lanes that are physically separated from normal traffic, which caused it to lose marks on ITDP’s scorecard. ... Sadik-Khan, the transportation commissioner, isn’t too worried about that. The city has three BRT lines right now—the department describes them by its own term, Select Bus Service—and another three are in the works. Eventually the hope is to have 16 lines. While buses don’t travel in separated lanes, they drive in specially painted ones that cars are prohibited from using during peak hours. If they do, the buses snap a photo, and the drivers are ticketed. ‘It’s the system that works for New York,’ Sadik-Khan says. ‘For New York, every single time we’ve put in a Select Bus Service route, we’ve seen an increase in ridership—amid a citywide decline in bus ridership.’’

Would a Select Bus Service work in suburban Maryland? Would it be satisfactory rather than optimal? Is “satisfactory” sufficient?

IMMIGRANTS AND HIGHER EDUCATION

Immigrants’ overall education attainment rates lag behind those of the USA-born population. Among adults aged 25 and older in 2007, similar percentages of the foreign- and U.S.-born populations had bachelor’s degrees (27% vs. 28%, respectively), but a lower proportion of the foreign-born (44%) than the U.S.-born (56%) population had completed some college but had not earned a bachelor’s degree.

Postsecondary enrollment and attainment rates differ among immigrants depending on their country of origin and age at immigration, and among individuals born in the United States, whether they had parents who were immigrants or were born in the United States.

Interestingly, a higher percentage of immigrants from Europe, Africa, and Asia have some college or more than do natives, but those from Latin countries bring the figure down. Only 17% of immigrants from Mexico, 28% from Central America, 54%, and Caribbean, 43%. One implication is that we need to open more avenues to higher education for immigrants. So we have to reduce dropping out and enhance mentoring and tutoring. If all young immigrants can DREAM, the low figures will soon increase significantly.

There’s a tie-in with the new Federal policy: having a diploma or being enrolled in school is a criterion. Does that mean there will be a rush to return to school?

There is a strong relationship between education and poverty. Of course, both are dependent upon opportunity, and opportunity in the USA and elsewhere is unequal. In our country, 22% of natives under 18 years of age were poor in 2010; for the foreign born, the figure was 31%. The highest poverty was among Mexican children, 46%. That’s scary and another danger sign.

POOR AND RICH IN THE USA ARE SEPARATING INTO MORE “EXCLUSIVE” NEIGHBORHOODS

Some people advocate economically and racially/ethnically mixed neighborhoods in an effort to lower social and cultural divides and raise opportunities for all. But the opposite is happening according to current research by the Pew Research Center. That’s the message of the Pew graphic, below. The result is very different American dreams.
