Title of thesis:

THE ME NOBODY KNOWS: NAVIGATING THE AUTHENTICITY OF CHARACTER THROUGH COSTUME DESIGN FOR THE UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND’S 2014 PRODUCTION

Robert Antonio Croghan, Master of Fine Arts, 2015

Thesis directed by:

Professor Helen Q. Huang, Department of Theatre, Dance, and Performance Studies

The following thesis navigates the primary artistic concept, design process and execution of Robert Croghan’s costume design for the University of Maryland’s production of The Me Nobody Knows. The Me Nobody Knows opened October 10th, 2014 in the University of Maryland’s Kay Theatre. It was directed by Alvin Mayes and Scot Reese with L. Richmond Sparks as musical director. The Set was designed by April Joy Tritchler, Lighting was designed by Brittany Shemuga, and Projections were designed by Hannah Marsh.

Dedication

I would like to dedicate this work to my mentor Helen Q. Huang for her continual support in making me a stronger, more resilient artist. In addition, I would like to dedicate this work to my parents Gary and Ivana Croghan.

To all those involved in the University of Maryland’s production of The Me Nobody Knows; directors, designers, cast, and crew alike, thank you for all the hard work and commitment you brought to this production.

Chapter 1: Concept Statement

_The Me Nobody Knows_ is an American musical that demonstrates the sheer tenacity of the human spirit against oppression, drugs, poverty, abuse and neglect. Set in a multipurpose room in a sequestered part of New York City, high school students from all over the area come together for their weekly group therapy session.

Originally published as a children’s book entitled, _The Me Nobody Knows: Children’s Voices from the Ghetto_, Stephen Joseph edited a collection of nearly 200 short stories and poems written by schoolchildren all over New York City. Robert H. Livingston and Herb Shapiro were inspired by the book’s unsentimental determination for hope, and with the guidance of Stephen Joseph, Livingston and Shapiro adapted the collection of stories into a script that is still utilized today. While the music may be perceived as outdated, Gary William Friedman (music composer) and Will Holt (lyricist) captured the candidness and honesty of these stories in a groundbreaking score embracing rock music, classical fugues, rap and jazz.

The design conversations with directors Scot Reese and Alvin Mayes began with the notion that our production was going to be modernized to speak directly to today’s youth culture.

In short, my goal for this production was to create genuine silhouettes for each character, maintaining the quality and standards set forth by the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center.

First, I needed to delve into the minds of the characters. Before I started to research, I asked myself; what magazines/blogs/videos do these characters look at? Who do they aspire to be? Who do they idolize? What best represents them? Who do they associate with in school? After answering these questions, I found pictures to support my interpretations and arranged the images into collages. During the preliminary design meetings, Reese, Mayes and I looked at the research collages and established a vocabulary to describe this production. We determined that the story should be told through a visual lens known as “heightened reality.” The stories in the script are grounded in reality but the visuals are slightly augmented, intensifying the dialogue’s use of excess imagery and emotions in order to create a dream-like quality. The main reason for this heightened reality, amplifying the colors and silhouettes of the garments, was based on the venue of the production. The Kay Theatre is a 626-seated theatre, containing an orchestra seat level as well as a balcony level. Reese and Mayes wanted to make sure that the same story could be conveyed to each audience member, no matter the seating arrangement.

An attribute for this design process was that Reese and Mayes permitted me to attend the casting callbacks. By allowing me this opportunity, I was able to have one-on-one conversations with each of the auditioning actors, obtaining a sense of who they are, what kind of clothes they are drawn to, how they perceive themselves by today’s societal standards, etc. By the end of the callback process, I was able to combine my knowledge from each interview with the directors’ top actor choices to determine who these characters were and how they were to look.

I started by identifying the garments that would reside in each character’s closet. In every closet, there is a favorite garment. A pair of jeans that have the right amount of stretch over the thighs, slightly torn hem from walking around too much, a small sharpie stain on the front right pocket. A sweatshirt that has misshaped front pockets from the weight of carrying too many objects, a stretched out neckline, and a large patch at the elbow to cover up a hole. Garments like these are considered “loved.” While the dynamisms of these garments fluctuated from character to character, they served the same purpose; the garments meant to tell a story of their journey to self-discovery, not to display their socioeconomic status for the audience to judge.

One exciting aspect to the design of this production is that the actor heavily motivated each character. Throughout the show, each character has a moment of clarity, allowing their vulnerability to be seen and heard by the ensemble. By allowing multiple layers of garments (as well as jackets, backpacks, and hats), I allotted each actor to experiment with their motivation in the removal of various layers. The experimentation of the layers began during their first round of fittings. As I walked the performers through the research and renderings, I gave them advice on which layer (or accessory) seemed most important and thusly should only be removed when their moment of clarity happens. Christopher Lane and I were able to have a great conversation during one fitting about his bomber jacket. From my interpretation of the script, Clorox heavily guarded his emotions, emanating the same brick walls that surround his neighborhood. I saw his bomber jacket as his security blanket, guarding him at all times. Together, Christopher and I were able to storyboard when we see the jacket on, unzipped, and removed. A similar collaboration happened with Noelle Roy during her first fitting as Catherine. From the beginning of the rehearsal process, I discovered that Reese and Mayes were going to highlight the relationship between Catherine and Carlos. While Carlos was sent to a psychiatric treatment center, Catherine was abandoned, alone and pregnant. While she was furious with Carlos for leaving, she always kept his sweater on her for it had his scent embedded in its fibers. Noelle, intrigued by my commentary, was motivated to create a dynamic, emotional portrayal of Catherine. I believe my interaction and guidance of these layers created a truly unique experience for each performer as well as myself.

In addition to determining the garments for each character, I was excited at the possibilities of each character’s shoes. Since most of my previous designs at the University of Maryland were dance productions, I rarely designed with shoes in mind. These characters heavily rely on their shoes to navigate their lives. Shoes take them away from their burdensome lives (even if just for an afternoon at a group therapy session), carry them to school to escape their home life/neighborhood, help to escape the pressures imposed upon them by their peers and society. This is a show where the shoes were vital to telling each character’s story. Once allotted the budget set forth by the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center, I dedicated a large sum of the budget to shoes.

One challenge I imposed on myself was to create a couple of graphics that would be printed on fabric, and then made into garments. I wanted to try my hand at print design and learn how to blend the idea of a heightened reality with today’s fashion trends. While I planned on having more garments created from my handcrafted prints, there were a small number of textiles to choose from, and since I did not want to compromise the integrity of the characters, I edited down the number of garments we were going to create. Ultimately, I created a skirt print for Rhoda, a tank top print for Clorox, and lining print for Lloyd’s blazer.

Our MFA program in theatre design aims to shape its students into resilient visual artists. Through my mentors, classwork, and assistance on productions, I built the confidence and skill level necessary to achieve a strong visual interpretation of the characters in The Me Nobody Knows.
Chapter 2: Character & Costume Research

These images were arranged in configurations that reflected my thoughts about each character; i.e. who they are inspired by, what their dreams are, and what would they buy if money wasn’t an object.

Chapter 4: Fitting Photos

The following images document the fitting process for each actor. There were a combination of garments built by the Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center, as well as modified garments, and altered garments. Even after the fitting process, there were some slight changes made to certain actors once in the theatre venue.

Noah Israel as Lloyd
Rebecca Mount as Rhoda
Tiziano D’Affuso as Carlos
Tyasia Velines as Nell
Christopher Lane as Clorox
Kristen El Yaouti as Melba
Tendo Nsubuga - Benjamin
Chloe Adler as Lillian Avery Collins as Donald
Noelle Roy as Catherine
Sam Elmore as William
Chioma Dunkley as Lillie Mae

Shoe Distress Detail

- Sam Elmore
  - Appearance: The shoes were dirty and had tried to clean/wipe away.

- Tendo Nsubuga
  - Appearance: Dirty but NOT torn. He likes to play outside.

- Tiziano D’Affuso
  - Since these are his only pair of shoes, he tries to take good care of them. But they are worn a lot.

Chapter 7: Conclusion

Although the script for The Me Nobody Knows was complex and abstract, I am proud of the collaboration between our design team members, the directors, and the performers.

I feel I was particularly successful maintaining the color palette, from research through its transition to stage. Another success of mine was the execution of my character renderings. I feel I interpreted my renderings well, and what was seen on paper was ultimately seen on stage.

In hindsight, one of my less successful elements of design was my relationship with the directors, Scot Reese and Alvin Mayes. From the beginning of this process, it was made clear that my relationship was strictly to design the costumes of each character. I was not able to interrogate their conceptual, overarching ideas about the show, directorial perspectives, or suggestions about the visual through lines. In a program that urges its graduate design students to understand the importance of true collaboration, I feel like I fell short in that regard. As much as I tried to question why the production was being modernized, ask how the music was going to be updated for today’s audience, were projections vital to further the stories of these characters, question whether the top of show could have been stronger, better establishing the setting of the show. While I feel these questions were valid, I was repeatedly told that my role in the production was to design the costumes, not direct.

Despite these limitations, designing the costumes for The Me Nobody Knows was an insightful experience, one of which I will continue to carry with me as a professional costume designer.
